

How can architecture help to humanize urban space?

-Sharon & Krish

- In India, people mainly use public places to interact with others from their own community. There isn't much 'inter-community' interaction.
- This, for example, means that people with a relatively better status are more likely to interact with each other

The term humanizing distinctly denotes the providing of a common platform for everyone. So, we believe that public space must be-

- Well designed (sense of togetherness)
- Be accessible to people of all religions or communities
- A place where people identify and respect the diversity of culture and religion in their country

The Lotus Temple

- The Lotus Temple in New Delhi is a Bahai temple where people come to worship regardless of their religion.
- It is therefore accessible to people of all religions and people can easily notice the diversity in culture.
- We therefore believe that all urban spaces must follow a similar ideology.
